

FUTURE GRAIN LEADERS START THEIR JOURNEY WITH GRAINGROWERS

31 January 2020

Ten emerging leaders of the grains industry are taking the next step in enhancing their leadership style and skills as part of GrainGrowers' Australian Grain Leaders Program (AGLP).

With the impacts of the ongoing drought and the recent bushfires being felt across agriculture, it is an opportunity for future grains sector leaders to take part in a program that has been designed specifically for their industry.

The group is made up of growers and grains industry professionals. Chris Clyne, one of the program participants is a grower from Biniguy, NSW who returned to his family farm after working overseas in investment banking. "There are unique challenges you face when running a farming enterprise and it will be good to share experiences with others as part of the AGLP" said Chris.

GrainGrowers Chairman Brett Hosking, who is also an alumnus of the program, is looking forward to meeting the next crop of emerging leaders.

"The AGLP helped shape my journey as a leader as I'm sure it will for this outstanding group of people. I'm excited to learn about their personal journeys and help set them on a course of becoming leaders for the grains industry of the future."

Executive Director of the Australian Farm Institute and Director for the Grains and Research Development Corporation Richard Heath will present to the group, along with GrainGrowers' Chairman Brett Hosking and CEO David McKeon.

The group will also be going on visits to the Australian Centre for Field Robotics, White Prince Mushrooms and Melanda Park Pork.
